What to do when everything changes?

PICTURE BOOK

Kintsugi

Issa Watanabe

The most treasured possessions can fall and shatter, but they can be fixed, just like people.

Kintsugi is the Japanese art of restoring a broken piece of pottery by bonding the fragments together with a mixture of resin and precious metals. A new and unique object is thus born, whose cracks tell a tale.

230 x 230 mm

Hardcover

38 pgs.

Rights available

A bird takes flight, a cup breaks, a journey, a discovery and a transformation take place. What seemed unattainable ultimately restores beauty to the world.

The philosophy of this age-old technique - mending the crack, healing the wound, ennobling the scar - inspires this new book by the author of Migrantes (2020 Llibreter Award). A silent fable of loss and downfall, the chance to overcome adversity, the acceptance of our own fragility.

A serene elaboration on the vicissitudes of existence, on all we have experienced. A book to be shared and enjoyed by young and old alike.

We are all one and we all live on the same planet; this is the idea behind the 22 first-person accounts in the book, where each double-page spread presents a contemporary and stimulating insight into more than twenty native peoples, the first to inhabit territories that today are depleted by a "civilisation" that seeks only to gain profit from them. Among these peoples, a communal sense of life prevails, based on reciprocity, solidarity and mutual aid; on avoiding overindulgence and honouring what is received.

French-Uruguayan author Nat Cardozo has crafted a unique book with beautiful illustrations that blur the boundaries between human beings and the environment.

Literary editorship is by María José Ferrada (SM Ibero-American Prize for Children's and Young People's Literature 2021).

IMAGINARY ENCYCLOPEDIA

Book of Wonders

Illustrated inventory of all things
living, dead and imagined

Pere Ginard

A collection of a hundred or so plates featuring an extraordinary series of over a thousand characters and drawn "things", which advocate an enchanted world where diversity, the unexpected and the contingent take on the form of a naïve and exuberant encyclopedia. A book that can be read from right to left and left to right, from top to bottom and bottom to top, daring the reader to answer two key questions: what is the relationship between the elements, and how do we name such a classification?

Pere Ginard, a highly experienced artist and filmmaker, develops his own inventory of the world where he combines pen and ink illustrations of fossils, aliens, crystals, countless series, natural forms and visual metaphors that defy the reader whilst bringing a smile to their face.

Over the years, out of pure pleasure, I have been compiling, sorting and labeling, with the patience of a nineteenth-century entomologist, some drawings scattered throughout my notebooks. They are classifications with no scientific pretensions; accumulations very much in the vein of sixteenth or seventeenth century rooms of wonder, or of a bewildering children's collection.”

Cat in the Road

Nicanor Parra

Illustrated by Joan Casaramona

Published in 1935, “Gato en el camino” (Cat in the Road) is the first “self-antecedent of Antipoetry”; it is the first glimpse of the great Chilean poet and Cervantes Prize Nicanor Parra’s forthcoming breakaway vision. Absurdity, disconnection and humor envelop the eventful life of a kitten abandoned to its fate in the middle of the pavement.

Joan Casaramona has made use of Parra’s literary genius to present the reader with an endless array of adventures that can be enjoyed through simple visual games. He has also created an illustrated artifact that is more than just an album, a playful space where the reader can both read and play. The tone of its illustrations and its graphics make this is a timeless book, fit for readers of all ages.

“He was a cat. He once went astray. He came close to some woods. The surroundings were covered with meadows. Scattered on the path were some tea spoons and spinning tops. The cat was walking along the path. A neighbour found him and took him home. His son asked him for the cat, but he refused to give it to him. He wrapped the cat in some paper and went to give him back to the owner.”

Migrants

Issa Watanabe

This book narrates, with extraordinarily forceful images, the journey of a group of animals that leaves behind a leafless, nocturnal forest. It is the story of a great and unique migration, a journey where sacrifices are made, loved ones are left behind; borders must be crossed...

How many borders must be crossed to get home? You must be courageous to migrate. Death constantly looms throughout the entire journey. And what if arriving means burying that death? A portion of our past, of our memories... Could it be that the desert never ends?

It is an indispensable book that absorbs the reader in a voyage of uncertainty, where death coexists with the hope of seeing how the grass grows once again in a desert of darkness.

PICTURE BOOK

The Clay Figurine

Emma Reyes

Illustrated by Carme Solé Vendrell

This story comes from the book The Book of Emma Reyes: A Memoir in Correspondence, by Colombian painter Emma Reyes. The story, told through the eyes of Emma Reyes, goes back to the day when she, with the help of her friend "el Piojo" and other street children, created General Rebollo with their own hands. The writer thus reveals one of her most distant memories, when she was an orphaned child amid the misery of Bogotá in the 1920s, but she does so with words that convey the sparkle and naivety of a childhood game.

It is a moving album, in which Carme Solé Vendrell's spontaneous strokes and technical richness enhance the expressiveness of such a collective personage: childhood at its most vulnerable.

Frida Kahlo kept a journal during the last ten years of her life (1944-1954). This surprising and intimate document, which was kept under lock and key for approximately forty years, contains multiple signs of this renowned Mexican artist's complex personality. The Two Fridas is an illustrated album where, for the first time, Frida's voice is heard. She describes one of her first childhood memories concisely and poignantly: her friendship, at six years old, with an imaginary friend.

Gianluca Folì's illustrations, without trying to imitate Frida's unmistakable style, succeed in capturing, with a clean and vibrant stroke, the cosmogony and symbolism already evident in the artist's words.

The Bear's Discourse Julio Cortázar

Illustrated by Emilio Urberuaga

This is the story of a bear that lives in the plumbing of a building and who discovers the strange and lonely lives of human beings. This amazing story is a fine example of the great Julio Cortázar's writing.

Cortázar plays, laughs and crafts texts that seem destined to pierce through all categorisation, even those determined to split readers by age. The bear pictured by Urberuaga is a deep red bear, cut out against a bright yellow background. A bear who shows himself to be carefree and playful in his impossible, dreamlike nature; an endearing character who would have delighted Cortázar himself.

I Am an Animal

An owl glimpsing in the dark or a bear slumbering in its den are some of the characters in this book, where young children will discover, by observing the animal world, a surprising side to themselves. Sixteen illustrations that humorously and expressively highlight some routine animal activities, listed in the form of a litany or song.

Text that grows in intensity as the reader progresses, turning its reading into a game of meanings that prompts us to take a closer look at animals and, ultimately, feel proud to be one.

Doubt

Pia Valentinis

Doubt is perhaps one of the few things we are given in life that helps us learn how to choose and how to appreciate life's different paths. But doubt is also a way to explore the connection between our inner and outer worlds. This book invites us to think about ourselves, about the way we are related to our families and friends, and all those feelings which make us human.

The harmony between the text and the illustrations highlight Pia Valentinis' sensibility. She uses the format of a fable to create an atmosphere of intimacy and complicity with the reader. This is a book that will let children think about their own certainties, through their doubts.

FANTASY / FAIRY TALES

Peter Pan

Illustrated by

This new edition of Peter Pan, illustrated by Svetlin Vassilev, presents a novel interpretation of a universal myth which radically breaks with the stereotypes portraying the character of Peter Pan. Svetlin captures the most controversial nuances of an ageless child who is magical, proud, charismatic and cruel, yet, at the same time, adventurous, exciting and provocative...

More than fifty acrylic illustrations accompany this timeless work. The artist's dynamic and virtuous style takes us back to a grand mise-en-scène; the dramatisation of a tale that was originally written to be performed.

MIRIORAMA IN CARDBOARD CASE

In the Forest

Illustrated by

Ana María Matute was a great storyteller. In 1996, when she took up armchair "K" at the Spanish Royal Academy of Language, she expressed in her speech this passion for fantasy and the imaginary forests shaping her literature. This special edition pays homage to the cosmogony of the fairy tales that inspired her.

It includes a booklet with the text of "In the Forest", a fragment of her speech and a collection of nine cards illustrated by Elena Odriozola, which, like popular nineteenth-century myrioramas, combined at random and arranged in a row, allow the creation of more than three hundred thousand scenes and infinite stories within the same landscape: the forest.

“The forest was the place I liked to escape to, it was my place.
I learned that darkness shimmers there; that it blazes, even. I learned that birds in flight inscribe ancient words in the air,
which are the genesis of every single book in the world;
that murmurs and sounds utterly unknown to humankind proliferate,
and the forest itself produces a song.”
