Pinocchio

Carlo Collodi

978-1-78617-440-6

Eight of the most beloved stories in children's literature are presented as large-format gift editions, with stunning foiled jackets, ribbon markers and beautiful illustrations throughout.

Textured case with foil and debossing

Pinocchio

it than it began to grow. And it grew, and grew, and grew, until in a few minutes it had become an immense nose that seemed as if it would never end.

Poor Geppetto tired himself out with cutting it off; but the more he cut and shortened it, the longer did that impertinent nose become! The mouth was not even completed when it began to laugh and deride him.

"Stop laughing!" said Geppetto, provoked.

The mouth then ceased laughing, but put out its tongue as far as it would go.

Geppetto, not to spoil his handiwork, pretended not to see and continued his labours. After the mouth he fashioned the chin, then the throat, then the shoulders, the stomach, the arms and the hands.

The hands were scarcely finished when Geppetto felt his wig snatched from his head. He turned round and what did he see? He saw his yellow wig in the puppet's hand.

"Pinocchio! Give me back my wig instantly!"

But Pinocchio, instead of returning it, put it on his own head - and was as a result nearly smothered by it.

Geppetto felt more melancholy than he had ever been before. Turning to Pinocchio, he said: "You young rascal! You are not yet completed and you are already beginning to show lack of respect to your father! That is bad, my boy, very bad!" And he dried a tear.

When Geppetto had finished the legs and feet, he received a kick on the point of his nose.

"I should have seen that coming!" he said to himself.

He then took the puppet under the arms and placed him on the floor to teach him to walk. Pinocchio's legs were stiff and he could not move, but Geppetto led him by the hand and showed him how to put one foot before the other.

When his legs became flexible, Pinocchio began to walk by himself

Survival tricks

59 Butterflies and moths use trickery, deceit and pretence to survive. Some have large rounded eye-like patterns, eyespots, on the wings. These are usually hidden, but the butterfly or moth can suddenly move its wings to display them. They look like the eyes of a cat, hawk, owl similar fierce creature, and so can frighten away predators.

▲ The Io moth's eyespots are hidden until it is threatened by a predator.

Eyespot

60 Like caterpillars, some adults have bright warning colours and patterns, such as yellow and black, or red and black. These tell predators that it tastes horrible or is poisonous. After a predator has tried to eat one, it recognizes the warning colours and avoids others with those colours.

▼ Tiger-striped, tiger and ranaota longings share similar colours to show they taste horrible.

Tiger-striped longwing

Tiger longwing

Ranaota longwing

61 Different distasteful species sometimes have very similar warning colours. After a predator encounters one of them, it avoids any similar-coloured creatures. This kind of similarity is known as Mullerian mimicry.

62 Other species have warning colours – yet they are quite tasty! This kind of pretence is called Batesian mimicry. The pretender, or mimic, looks similar to a distasteful or poisonous species, so predators tend to avoid the mimic as well.

ACTUAL SIZE

63 In other forms of mimicry, butterflies and moths pretend to be very different kinds of animals. They mimic creatures that their predators do not usually eat, such as wasps and spiders, and even toads and snakes. The atlas moth's front wingtip resembles a snake's head, complete with eye and mouth slit!

▲ The tip of the atlas moth's wing looks like a snake.

64 There can also be different colour forms of the same species. These breed together as usual, but they look quite unlike each other, known as polymorphs. Each form or morph may mimic another, different species. So for a predator, knowing which species is which, and whether it tastes good or bad, is difficult!

QUIZ

1. Which colours are examples of warning colours?
2. Which animal does the atlas moth's wingtip resemble?
3. What is the name for different colour forms of the same species?

Answers:
1. Yellow, red and black
2. A snake
3. Polymorphs
