Flavio Del Ponte

Flavio Del Ponte was born in Switzerland in 1944. After studying medicine, he completed further training specializing in general surgery, traumatology, and war surgery. From 1986, he worked as a training instructor for war surgeons at various locations, including on behalf of the Red Cross and the WHO, as Chief Medical Officer of the UN mission in Africa and as Medical Advisor to the Secretary General for the UN Peacekeeping Operation in New York. From 1996 to 2009, as a doctor for Swiss Humanitarian Aid, he was also responsible for the international dossiers on mine action (Ottawa Convention) and bioterrorism.

Dissonances

The Adventurous Life of a Passionate Surgeon

Cambodia, Vietnam, Sahara, Rwanda - for forty years, surgeon Flavio Del Ponte was confronted with the suffering of war all over the world. Today, he looks in the rear-view mirror and sees himself as a young, hopeful doctor who traveled the world and ended up as a war surgeon. He almost doesn't notice how his profession and the roles offered to him change during this time: military, political, as a diplomat on the staff of the UN Secretary General and, last but not least, as a humanitarian aid worker. But at heart, he always remained a doctor with the firm idea of helping those who suffer.

A war surgeon fights for peace.

Erich Vad

Dr. Erich Vad is a retired Brigadier General of the German Armed Forces, management consultant, publicist and university lecturer. From 2006 to 2013, he was group leader in the Federal Chancellery, member of the Federal Security Council and military policy advisor to then Chancellor Angela Merkel.

Deterring or Frightening?

Europe without Security

What does the South China Sea have to do with the Crimean Peninsula? Is the USA still our friend and helper? Speaking of which, what flag is Europe actually fighting under? Dr. Erich Vad, retired Brigadier General and military policy advisor to former German Chancellor Angela Merkel, provides answers: Europe needs sustainable security. And it won't come by itself, but only if we do something about it, and hopefully it will also come from Germany. Because if we want to preserve life as we know it and our freedom, then we must know our own - German and European - interests and act accordingly. This makes us a state and a continent that has the strength and influence to find and implement solutions. Erich Vad shows ways to prevent wars and preserve peace through credible military deterrence, defense capability and diplomacy.

A book for anyone who wants to know what it takes to strengthen Europe and preserve peace.

Plan B for the Climate

Overcoming Climate Change with the Forces of Nature

It is getting warmer and the cause is carbon dioxide from burning coal, gas and oil. Politicians are calling for the extinction of humanity and demanding radical and unachievable measures. But there is a way beyond ideology. Oceans and land plants absorb half of the carbon dioxide every year. So if we reduce our emissions by half, the concentration of CO₂ in the air would remain constant. In addition, the capacity of the sinks can be increased with gentle measures. It is a citizen-friendly path to the future that poorer countries can also follow.

How ideology-free climate protection succeeds.

Misdiagnosis

How Market-Liberal Economists are Ruining the Economy and Dividing Society

The German economy is in a bad state, the living standards of many people have fallen dramatically and the AfD is gaining support. In this book, the renowned economist Tom Krebs shows that a misdiagnosis by market-liberal economists and the corresponding wrong decisions by the German government are responsible for the poor situation in Germany. In order to save German prosperity and strengthen cohesion, German politicians must free themselves from the market-liberal mindset of the economists. This book shows how this can be done and which path leads out of the crisis.

Freeing politics from the economists' market-liberal mindset.

What You Always Wanted to Know About the Climate but never Dared to Ask

Climate Change between Lobby Groups and Science

There is plenty of reading about climate change, but two types dominate the genre: one that dramatically warns of the apocalypse, and one that seeks to expose alarmism as a Trojan horse of political forces. Both ignore the essentials: On the one hand, science has convincingly demonstrated that there is a climate problem; on the other, it is in fact being exploited politically. So instead of falling into one of the two categories, this book tells the story of how the niche subject of meteorology became the defining topic of our time. This is by no means only because global warming brings with it manifest risks, but also because science is misused as a vehicle for power, influence and money.

How lobby interests are hampering the solution to climate change.

"We are different from what you think"

Arab feminism

Arab women have been fighting for their rights for more than a hundred years. They are fighting against violence and for self-determination over their lives and their bodies. They demand equal rights and an end to male dominance. This book tells of their successes, but also of the obstacles in a difficult environment. It does not report on Arab women but lets them speak for themselves and thus paints a multi-faceted picture of Arab feminism.

Bernhard Hommel

Bernhard Hommel, born in 1958, is a lecturer and researcher at TU Dresden and Shandong Normal University in Jinan, China. After studying psychology in Bielefeld and completing his doctorate in psychology, he worked at the Max Planck Institute for Psychological Research in Munich. He is now also a Senator of the German National Academy of Sciences Leopoldina. He lives in Kassel.

We're Triggering ourselves to Death

Psychogram of a Neurotic Society

In his new book, Bernhard Hommel answers the question of why more and more people are reaching their psychological limits and beyond, are constantly outraged or depressed, and are increasingly stressed and overwhelmed. It explains in a generally understandable way and without technical jargon that all these exceptional psychological states are neurotic in nature, what components human neuroses consist of, and that many important socio-political changes and fashions of recent years are predestined to create, fuel and permanently establish neurotic states in people. Hommel also explains what we can do to mitigate our neuroses and make our social environment mentally healthier.

Why we are constantly outraged and overwhelmed.

Progress

Life and Death of a Chimera

"World history is progress in the consciousness of freedom, a progress that we have to recognize in its necessity," said Hegel. This dictum can be regarded as paradigmatic for the optimism of progress during the Enlightenment. However, undeniable achievements of progress in all areas of life have always been accompanied by the downsides of the same progress. Moshe Zuckermann explores this dialectic in his essay. In the first part, he panoramically traces the theoretical dimensions, aspirations and contradictions of modernity, enlightenment and progress. In the second part, he looks at the empirical effects of this general complex on the areas of politics, society, technology, art and everyday life.

Media System and the Public Sphere in Crisis

Democracy and the media cannot be separated from each other in a mass society, as it is the responsibility of the media to provide citizens with orientation in the complex reality of society. In the context of the ongoing crisis discourses of recent years, both the foundations for democratic debate spaces and their social application have been called into question. This volume will therefore attempt to examine the state of the public debate space. The aim of the contributions in this book is to assess the current state and challenges of our (media) democracy and to discuss the opportunities and impulses that can arise from this analysis. The focus is on both the political discourse on democracy and the democratic constitution of the public sphere itself.

The state of the public debating chamber.

“I don't swim where the crocodiles are”

Sabine Kuegler grew up in the jungle of West Papua, Indonesia. Her book "Dschungelkind" became a worldwide bestseller. At the age of 17 she moved to Europe and experienced a culture clash. Today she lives in Hamburg, has children, friends and a job. But she is still torn between two worlds, and the inner struggle for her identity torments her. In the jungle, she learned that in order to survive, you have to become invisible - in the Western world, you have to be visible.

Sabine Kuegler was born in Nepal in 1972. At the age of five, she moved with her parents, both linguists, to the jungles of West Papua, Indonesia, where she spent her childhood and adolescence. At the age of 17, Kuegler left the jungle to complete her education in Switzerland. In 2005, she published her first book, Dschungelkind an international bestseller. In 2012, sick and abandoned by doctors, she returned to the jungle, where she lived with various tribes for almost five years, finally finding a cure.

Final questions What dying people want to know

At the end of a life, the unimportant things fade into the background and the big and fundamental questions arise. But what are the questions that emerge as central in the last hours of life? And how can they be dealt with? In his day-to-day work, pastor and Frankfurt hospital chaplain Matthias Struth encounters many people at the end of their lives who are thinking about the afterlife or dealing with their faith. Some people's faith is put to a tough test, others are only just emerging. Struth tells these stories with great ease and confidence, without taking away their seriousness.

Matthias Struth is a Catholic priest at the diocese of Limburg and preaches in the Liebfrauenkirche and in Frankfurt Cathedral. He has also been a hospital chaplain at the University Hospital in Frankfurt am Main. His focus is pastoral care on the palliative care unit.

In the Prison of Moral Understanding and overcoming division

Why do our differences of opinion end in bitter feuds that divide us? Why can we no longer argue with each other in a civilized manner and part on friendly terms? Where does the embarrassing silence in families, among friends, colleagues and in the media come from? This book explains how we have become so alienated from each other, where this is leading society - and how new understanding can succeed..

Dr. phil. Michael Andrick holds a PhD in philosophy and is a columnist for the Berliner Zeitung. His first book was published in 2020 "Erfolgsleere". For the stylistic clarity and conciseness of his texts, he received the Jürgen-Moll-Price in 2022. Andrick lives in Berlin, where he works in the private sector. Woke Psychology of a culture war

Psychologist Esther Bockwyt analyzes that what was once thought of as progressive left-wing identity politics has long since crossed the threshold into a militant ideology. A generalized division of people into victim groups and privileged groups is used to determine who is allowed to say or do what and when. As critical as she is balanced and, above all, far removed from the shrill tones of the feature pages, Bockwyt captures the topic of wokeness from a psychological perspective for the first time and asks: How is a "woke psyche" composed when narcissism, conscientiousness or aggression exceed a healthy level?

Esther Bockwyt studied psychology and legal psychology at the Universities of Marburg, Cologne and Bonn. She works as a self-employed psychological assessor and is the owner of the diagnostically active diagnostic expert office "Die Gutachterinnen".

Timm Koch

Timm Koch studied philosophy at the FU and Humboldt University in Berlin, is an author and writes scripts for film and television. For many years, he was amazed at how the enormous potential of hydrogen was hushed up while at the same time wars were being waged over crude oil, the groundwater of entire regions was being contaminated by fracking and a turnaround in transportation based on environmentally harmful batteries was being initiated. He now sees the change: hydrogen will generate a megatrend. His most recent book was "Lasst uns Paradiese pflanzen!" (2021).

Do you want total madness?

A Nazi Novel

At the end of the Second World War, high-ranking Nazis withdrew to South America via a church-organized rat line. They live there with the complicity of the American secret service. The author combines this narrative strand with a fictional family story - the Kochs are, in a way, the link between real historiography and the guarded secret. A counterfactual story and narrative grotesque that pokes fun at official historiography with subtle humor.
